ORGANIC BLACK SHEEP SWEATER

In western Ireland, sheep still graze the countryside, herded home by keeper and collies. The undyed naturally brown wool of these sweaters is knitted in a mill beside the River Gweestin, where woolens have been made since the 17th century. With the traditional pattern of the Aran Islands, this sweater has substantial weight without being bulky. Also available in Oatmeal and Natural Cream. Made in County Kerry, Ireland. Men's sizes; women order one size smaller than usual. XS-XXL.

ORGANIC WOOL SOCKS

Some fortunate sheep graze on grassland that has seen no artificial fertilizer, and the sheep are never subjected to chemical dip. From these happy flocks comes soft organic wool. The wool itself is minimally processed by environmentally friendly methods—no dyes or bleach, just the color of those contented sheep. Thick, soft socks keep your feet warm and happy. Natural Cream, Oatmeal, or Brown.

Size M or L. Made in Ireland.

How A Pair of Socks Saved Western Civilization

100 years into the Dark Ages, in a Europe without books, Irish monks shod in the warmest wool sailed to Gaul and re-introduced classical learning to the Continent. The voyage was arduous, but the monks were comforted by their faith—and their well-made socks. Western civilization was preserved, but it was the simple warmth of wool that saved the day.
